- Mark walked into the classroom, and he found all his classmates looked at him strangely. It seemed that they had something to say to him, but they couldn't. Even more, Mark felt they were angry with him. Mark was too shamed to talk to them. That was because Judy had taken three days off and hadn't shown up at school since the mean joke he played on her. Mark was always a naughty boy. What was worse, he didn't know how to respect others. One time he put a fake animal dead body in his girl classmate's drawer just to scare her. Another time he made some strange noise in class only to draw others' attention. Every time, his behavior was a big headache to his parents and teachers. They had advised him against doing these again, but he never listened. He used to think it was not a big deal until Judy's case happened.
- Judy was a new student who just transferred from another school this semester. Her face was always pale and white, and she looked as thin as a stick. That was because she had a weak body. However, Mark didn't mind. He kept playing different tricks on Judy until she couldn't stand him anymore. So Judy told their teacher Ms. Wang and Mark was grounded for a week. Mark thought it was Judy's fault and decided to get even with her. Three days ago, he secretly put a dead frog in her bookbag, and when Judy unexpectedly took it out from her bag, she cried and cried and cried. Then, she passed out and was sent to the hospital right away.

Mark finally learned a lesson from it and was so sorry for what he had done to Judy. When she woke up at the hospital, he visited her with his parents, and he also promised her not to do any tricks on anyone again. Judy forgave him and hoped he could be a changed person in the near future.

Janet: Hi, Maria. What did you do this weekend?

Maria: Oh, it was really lots of fun. I played bubble soccer with my family and all our relatives.

Janet: Bubble soccer? I've never heard that before.

Maria: I hadn't, either. In the past years, my family used to have a picnic when spring was around the corner. All of my uncles, aunts, and cousins would come, too. We would have a barbecue and then played some sports together. Sometimes we played baseball or dodgeball, and sometimes we played badminton for fun. This year, though, was different. My aunt Susan gave us a surprise after the barbecue.

Janet: So what on earth was it?

Maria: My aunt got some strange things out of her car, and then she started to blow them up with an air pump. Soon, there were eight giant bubbles on the grass. Then she told us that we were going to wear them and play the game.

Janet: Then how was the game going through?

Maria: There were two groups, and each had four players. While the players were playing, they had to knock down the players of the other group and tried to score against the other group's goal.

Janet: It sounded interesting!

Maria: It surely was. You could never imagine when each player was running in a giant bubble, how silly and funny they looked.

Janet: Then is it dangerous for players when playing?

Maria: Not at all. Although their hands are fixed, they still can keep their balance by using their legs. Even though they fall or roll, it is also safe for them when staying in the bubble. In fact, those who get easily hurt are the people who are not in the playground.

Janet: I see what you mean. When watching bubble soccer, we had better stay away from players to keep ourselves from being hit by the giant bubble!

Maria: You got it!
